Note	Dalla prefazione: "The present volume is the outcome of three scholarly meetings focusing upon early Christianity in its Jewish and Hellenistic contexts, which were part of a large international and interdisciplinary research project on orthodoxy and adaptation as conflicting religious identities, conducted by the Netherlands School for Advanced Studies in Theology and Religion (NOSTER) and the Theological Faculty of the Catholic University of Leuven. [...] [The] second meeting focused on methodological issues and what Twentieth-Century scholarship on the contexts of early Christianity has yielded. During a third meeting we concentrated on the issue of early Christian ethics in interaction with Jewish and Hellenistic contexts. The essays in this book result from the second and third meeting"
